One bright day in the dim long ago, a rip roaring circus stopped for a day on the great open wide prairie. In those days it seems that everybody considered 'circus's the one great sport and they all turned out. Some of them even tried to "Beat" their way in. Mr. Mannly Monk and his little boy sold pink lemonade to the jungle crowd. He was just about as popular as a first class boot-legger in these modern times.

One of the feature acts is Harold Cat and Izzy Mouse who do a strong act with weights on a see-saw but somehow everything worked out wrong and one of the large weights fell right on Harold's head and is destroyed---Harold is a sort of dumbell anyway and blames everything on poor little Izzy. He chases him up a tall ladder and into the sky a few miles, then down and off across the country. The rest of the circus wasn't over so we didn't follow.

There was an Indian rubber man, also a magician called He man, that nobody had ever heard of. The whole show was going over big. The whole crowd was nearly dropping dead at all of the marvelous performers when, two innocent looking skunks walked up to the box office. They are refused tickets but they decide to see the show anyway. Well nearly everybody escaped alive in the panic. The end of it all was a dance by four elephants, directed by the skunks.

The moral is: "Its hard to dance to what some stations broadcast thru the air."
